have a producer who works for the state telling you what you can and can't do."

Jaie Laplante, executive director of the festival, says he first had the idea to showcase Cuban indie films during a Q&A with director Ernesto Daranas after a screening at the Tower Theater of his film Conducta (Conduct), about a schoolteacher who takes a stand against authorities by helping a 12-year-old boy raised by a single mother addicted to drugs.

"An audience member asked, 'How did this film get made when the theme is clearly about people doing what they think is right regardless of the law?' " Laplante says. "The director replied, 'It got made by the holy spirit.' Here was someone who believed so much in the power of art and creativity as a spiritual force, he felt his film needed to get made. That's when I realized that these people were operating under an umbrella of freedom and these artists had been brave enough to say, 'Art above all.' I decided that was unquestionably the thing to focus on this year."
